

PLANS GAME SANCTUARY IN EACH VIRGINIA COUNTY

Commissioner Billisely Will Have Signs Placed to Preserve
State's Wild Life.

HOPE FOR QUAIL FARM SOON

Movement on Foot to Establish Institution With Support of Commonwealth—Fine of $50 for Violations.

In view of the fact that the hunting season opens November 1, an effort is being made by Commissioner Billisely, of the Department of Game and Inland Fisheries, of the State of Virginia, to have some portion of land set aside in each county in the State as a sanctuary for the wild life of the State.

At the time of the failure of the department to secure 4,000 quail from Texas, as it had hoped to do, a total of 300,000 acres of land had been promised the department for sanctuary purposes.

Seventy per cent of the owners of this land have since stated their willingness to have the department put up sanctuary signs in the hope of preserving the native game, looking forward to the time when the State will be able to realize plans now on foot to establish a quail-breeding farm.

Commissioner Billisely hopes to send two of the signs immediately for use in each county in Virginia. These signs are printed on cloth and are conspicuously large.

The text follows:
"You are hereby respectfully notified that the owner of this land has agreed for the use of the State as an auxiliary State game sanctuary, the purpose being to supply a haven of refuge into which game and wild birds of all kinds can retreat and be at rest at all times, in the hope that the increase of these creatures, secured through absolute protection, will overflow into the surrounding territory, where it may be taken under the provisions of existing laws."

Maximum Penalty of $50.
The maximum penalty of $50 will be asked to be imposed for killing any bird or animal within the limits of this preserve.

All persons interested in the perpetuation of hunting and the conservation of our game birds should notify this department of any violations that may come under their observation and all game wardens and ex-officio warden are especially charged to give this property their particular concern.

WHITE PLAGUE WORKERS COMBATTING INFLUENZA

Tuberculosis Association Field Agents
Will Conduct Contests Among School Pupils.

The Virginia Tuberculosis Association has placed at the disposal of the State Board of Health, for the purpose of combating "flu," if it should revisit Virginia this year, and for the particular purpose of preventing a recurrence of that affliction, its entire staff of trained workers.

No one knows whether influenza will be a scourge this year, as it was last. The United States Public Health Service, the Virginia Health Department and the health departments of the cities are making no prediction, but if history is to repeat itself there may be a second visitation.

The health authorities are propagating rules which give all the information that they have. They know that the disease is carried in the secretions of the mouth and nose and the transference of these secretions cause the spread of the disease. The Tuberculosis Association in order to make these rules popular, is offering three sets of prizes—one for the primary grades, one for the grammar grades and one for the high schools—for the best rhymes in each class of not more than eight words embodying the teaching of the two rules, which are: Whenever you cough or sneeze, bow your head or put a handkerchief over your mouth and nose.

Don't put in your mouth fingers, pencils or anything else that does not belong there, nor use a common drinking cup.

CROP SHORTAGE IN NORTH HELPS DEMAND IN SOUTH

Department of Agriculture Tells Southern Growers to Prepare to Furnish More Vegetables.

(By Associated Press.)
WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—A demand for Southern truck crops in the spring of 1920, even more promising than that of 1919, is forecast in a statement of the Department of Agriculture issued today. One of the important elements in producing this favorable situation for Southern truckers is the fact that the potato crop here fair to be 32,266,000 bushels short of the 1918 crop.

Growers of Bermuda-type onions have a brighter outlook than has existed during the last two seasons. The estimated autumn harvest of onions is more than 2,000,000 bushels short of that of last year and more than 1,000,000 bushels short of two years ago.

With normal distribution and consumption, the competition of Northern stored onions with the Southern Bermuda crop next spring is likely to be less severe than last season or that of 1918. In planning the acreage for the 1920 harvest, however, the department warns Southern growers to bear in mind that severe financial loss resulted at the harvest of 1918 from the excess acreage planted in the fall of 1917.

The cabbage crop in the nine Northern States, in which into summer cabbage is extensively grown, is said to be the smallest harvested since 1916—almost 200,000 tons less than in 1918 and nearly 100,000 tons less than in 1917.

The short crops of both cabbage and potatoes this season more nearly approach the conditions of 1916, when both these vegetables were scarce and higher than in any other year during the past decade.

Southern cabbage growers will therefore do well, the Department of Agriculture concludes, "to provide ample seed beds from which to plant an acreage sufficient, in a measure, to make up the deficiency which will exist in those markets where stored cabbage usually plays an important part."

FRENCH WON'T PERMIT OWN SOLDIERS' BODIES REMOVED

Government Refuses to Make Exception for Families Able to Arrange for Movement.

(By Associated Press.)
PARIS, Sept. 20.—The question of removing soldiers' bodies from military cemeteries along the front was brought up this morning in the Chamber of Deputies when M. Picaud, of Vendee, asked the Minister of War what measures the government expected to take to allow families to recover the bodies of their dead. Deputy Picaud said a bill had been introduced forbidding the removal of bodies for three years because means of transportation were lacking.

He declared that this argument was not admissible at present, there being plenty of trains to take tourists to the battlefields. He asserted the chamber ought not to dissolve without giving some satisfaction to families especially as American newspapers were stating that American dead were to be taken back across the Atlantic.

Replying in behalf of the ministry, M. Abram, of Pas de Calais, said there would be a risk of many terrible mistakes. He declared bodies of German soldiers had been found in graves bearing the inscription "A French soldier is buried here."

M. Picaud urged that when possible exhumations be allowed, but M. Abram said that this was impossible and that the government could make no exception favoring families who claimed to be able to arrange for the movement of bodies.

The Week's Weather.
